It brings a preview of the result in real time by means of a transparent projection. You can paint portraits, animals, objects, and you can even do some sketches. It's pretty powerful and comes with a wide range of presets that can help you to get started, so you don't have to waste time retouching every painting. It's definitely a kind of painting software that's worth checking out. And if you're thinking about getting a 3D printer, it's also a pretty good option to consider. Screenwriter Name: Screenwriter.com Website: Location: Multiple Locations, United States Founded in: 2011 Niche: Writing, Scripts, and Screenplays Overview Screenwriter.com is the leading site for the best scripts, screenplays, and screenwriting resources. Our writers come from every major writing school and industry. Hollywood, television, educational, and commercial writing. Our mission is to provide a platform for writers of all types to find their work, get hired, and improve their craft. Website Value: $350,200 Employees: 240 Founded by: Joanna Coates, Antonius Lee, Alexander Terrell, and Derek Parrish What Do They Do? The name Screenwriter.com is the best indication as to how they do business. They have an entire site dedicated to screenscripts, which is certainly not typical for a writing website. But you're not going to find much in terms of writing tips, screenwriting resources, or even plot ideas on their site. That being said, the site is well organized, with writing resources grouped by categories. The way the site works is like this: you can search for what you're looking for, or you can subscribe to one of their membership plans. So, for instance, if you want to find the most popular screenwriting tips on their site, you can search for them. But there is also the option to subscribe to one of the membership plans, including the Platinum plan, which offers you the most comprehensive features. This plan includes a searchable database of tips and writing tools, a 12-month trial for any script in their database, access to all the software listed in their site, and much more.
